Who are The Herald's Trust?

The Herald's Trust is a not-for-profit, non-denominational ministry in Scotland, established in 1970, and funded by supporters.

The Herald's' primary function is to equip and enable individuals and churches to carry out the proclamation of the Gospel message. This is done through evangelism seminars and programs for training, encouragement, and networking.

The goal of The Herald's is to provide key areas of ministry support for churches and individuals to enable them to grow in confidence in the Gospel message and to lead with purpose and vision. We seek to be 'Herald's' of the Gospel.

Why intern with us?

The Herald's Trust desires to see local churches involved in evangelism and discipleship. In the post-modern culture of Scotland, many churches and believers are not actively involved in sharing their faith. This may be due to lack of resources, support from the church, training on how to evangelize, or education as to why evangelism is central to the Gospel.

The Herald's Trust is unique in its ability to meet these needs. The Trust provides the curriculum and support for the local church to begin an evangelism and discipleship program. The internship is designed to be the link between the Trust and that church. The intern will work with the leadership of the church to develop and lead an evangelism and discipleship opportunities using the resources from The Herald's Trust.

The Herald's Trust is looking for men and women who have a desire to serve the Lord in local church ministry and who are prepared to lead in evangelism and discipleship. The Gospel Apprentice program is ideal for recent graduates who would like practical application of their chosen fields as well as opportunities to learn and refine skills in preparation for future ministry. The Herald's Trust's goal for interns is that each intern will grow and mature as believers and ministry leaders in preparation for what God has prepared for each one.
